

TWO ADDITIONS TO THE FLORA OF RHODE ISLAND.—In October, 1924, the writer collected in Rhode Island two plants that apparently have not been reported as occurring in the state. One of these, Tridens flavus (L.) Hitchc., was found on the slope of Neutaconkanut Hill, Providence, under conditions strongly suggesting that the plant had not been introduced. Gray's Manual (1908) gives the range as "Ct. to Mo. and southw." Since then this grass has been reported from Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard and Southboro, Massachusetts (see RHODORA 16: 82, May, 1914), and it has been collected elsewhere in Massachusetts.

The other plant is Polygonum puritanorum Fernald. This was collected in a sandy cart-path through a salt marsh near Point Judith, South Kingstown. It has been reported from various stations on Cape Cod, Massachusetts (Fernald in RHODORA 21: 141, August, 1919).—J. FRANKLIN COLLINS, Providence, Rhode Island.

Vol. 26, no. 310, including pages 181 to 200 and plates 146 to 148, was issued 15 December, 1924.
